

great powers of Europe was partly produced by the even distribution of power between them during the later nineteenth century: a

were doing so for the last time, that they were fighting a war to end all wars.

Above: Europe on the eve of the First World War. Germany and Austria-Hungary had great powers of Europe was partly produced by the even distribution of power between them during the later nineteenth century: a

were doing so for the last time, that they were fighting a war to end all wars.

Above: Europe on the eve of the First World War. Germany and Austria-Hungary had